REGENERATING YOUR BUSINESS & YOUR ORGANIZATION

Craig DeForest

Many well-run businesses are low on spirit and aspiration. They "stick to their knitting," but almost all work is focused on maintaining current (i.e., past) standards. Most of their people feel comfortable but somewhat lifeless in the workplace, and business results are sub-par and generally formed by their local economy and other forces outside of the business. You don't have to settle for "Mediocracy." Decide to break out of the ordinary and turn your human resources into generators of improvement, innovation, and regeneration in their work and ongoing increases in business results. This is possible to achieve in any business, even one restrained by severe regulations.
